5. Nominally, service with the Construction Branch is voluntary. In fact, however, no candidate selected by the MAI and offered work with the Construction Branch could refuse since the consequences would be quite unforeseeable. To turn down the "honor" of serving with the Rumanian Army is paramount to suicide.
6. The military barracks near the village of Fratelia in the Timisoara district are to be finished by October 1951. The barracks are single-story brick structures, measuring 10 meters by 30 meters, designed to house about 100 men. There is room for about 300 horses in the stables. An allocation of 4,000 to 5,000 million lei has been made for the year 1952 for the building of barracks in this area alone.
7. The military barracks near the village Mehala in the Timisoara district is a slightly smaller camp than that near Fratelia, with about 20% fewer barracks and stables. Otherwise the lay-out is similar.
8. The barracks for tank units are ten to fifteen brick buildings standing about fifteen meters apart. They are two-storied and measure about 30x10 meters. The tanks are kept in single-storied buildings, whose floors are slightly below ground level. A straight road leads right out of the camp from each building. There are about sixteen such sheds, each with three doors, and designed to hold six tanks.
9. The military barracks and stores near the village of Voiteg, in the Timisoara district, are stores made up of large wooden buildings with a roof sloping away from a central tree. They are about 60 meters long, with six or seven large doors. Their floors are slightly below ground level. Camouflage consists of creepers which cover all walls.
10. Surveying and levelling work is being carried out in the Orastia-Stamora-Moravita region for an electrified barbed wire fence, which is to run parallel to the frontier and very close to it. In places the fence comes as close as 20 meters to the border itself. An artificial waterfall at Gataia is to supply power for the electrification of this fence.
11. Strong fortifications including munition stores, anti-tank ditches, bunkers, and tank dug-outs are built at a distance of about seven km. from the frontier in the whole Timisoara region.

In the Mehala area there are at least two Soviet divisions. They are billeted in huts or peasants' homes while they await the completion of their barracks.

13. Labor is supplied by the Labor Battalions made up of young men of middle-class background, considered undesirable in the regular Army. These men are required to perform their normal period of conscription in labor units. The men wear either grey uniforms or clothing written off by the regular Army. The officers also wear grey uniforms, with badges of rank similar to those of the regular Army.
